Another year of Lolla is in the books. Give us your dream headliner(s) for Lolla 2012.

Scott Kleinberg (@scottkleinberg): R.E.M. or Elmo.

Danny Miller: Justin Bieber. He is so Lolla right now.

Jen Smith (@haterface): Ke$ha. Her grimey persona would fit perfectly with MudAPalooza.

The turf debacle at Soldier Field is going to affect the Bears' season because _____.

Scott: It's all the announcers are going to talk about. Can't wait.

Jane Huang: They can't blame the quarterback for this one.

Katie Holland (@hollandersauce): I'll place blame on Kristin Cavallari.

Sum up the final episode of 'Desperate Housewives' for us.

Scott: All the housewives get arrested and thrown in jail for not caring about the finale.

Lauren Whalen: Plastic-faced women have sex despite a creepy voice-over. The End!

Ryan Brinkerhoff (@r_vance_b): Dean Cain wakes up between Teri Hatcher, Eva Longoria. It was a dream.

WHO'S LIVING THE LONGEST?

CNN

No country has a higher life expectancy than Monaco—and it's not even close.

The average life expectancy in the tiny European principality is 89.73 years, according to the CIA World Factbook. That's a full five years more than Macau, which was second on the list at 84.41.

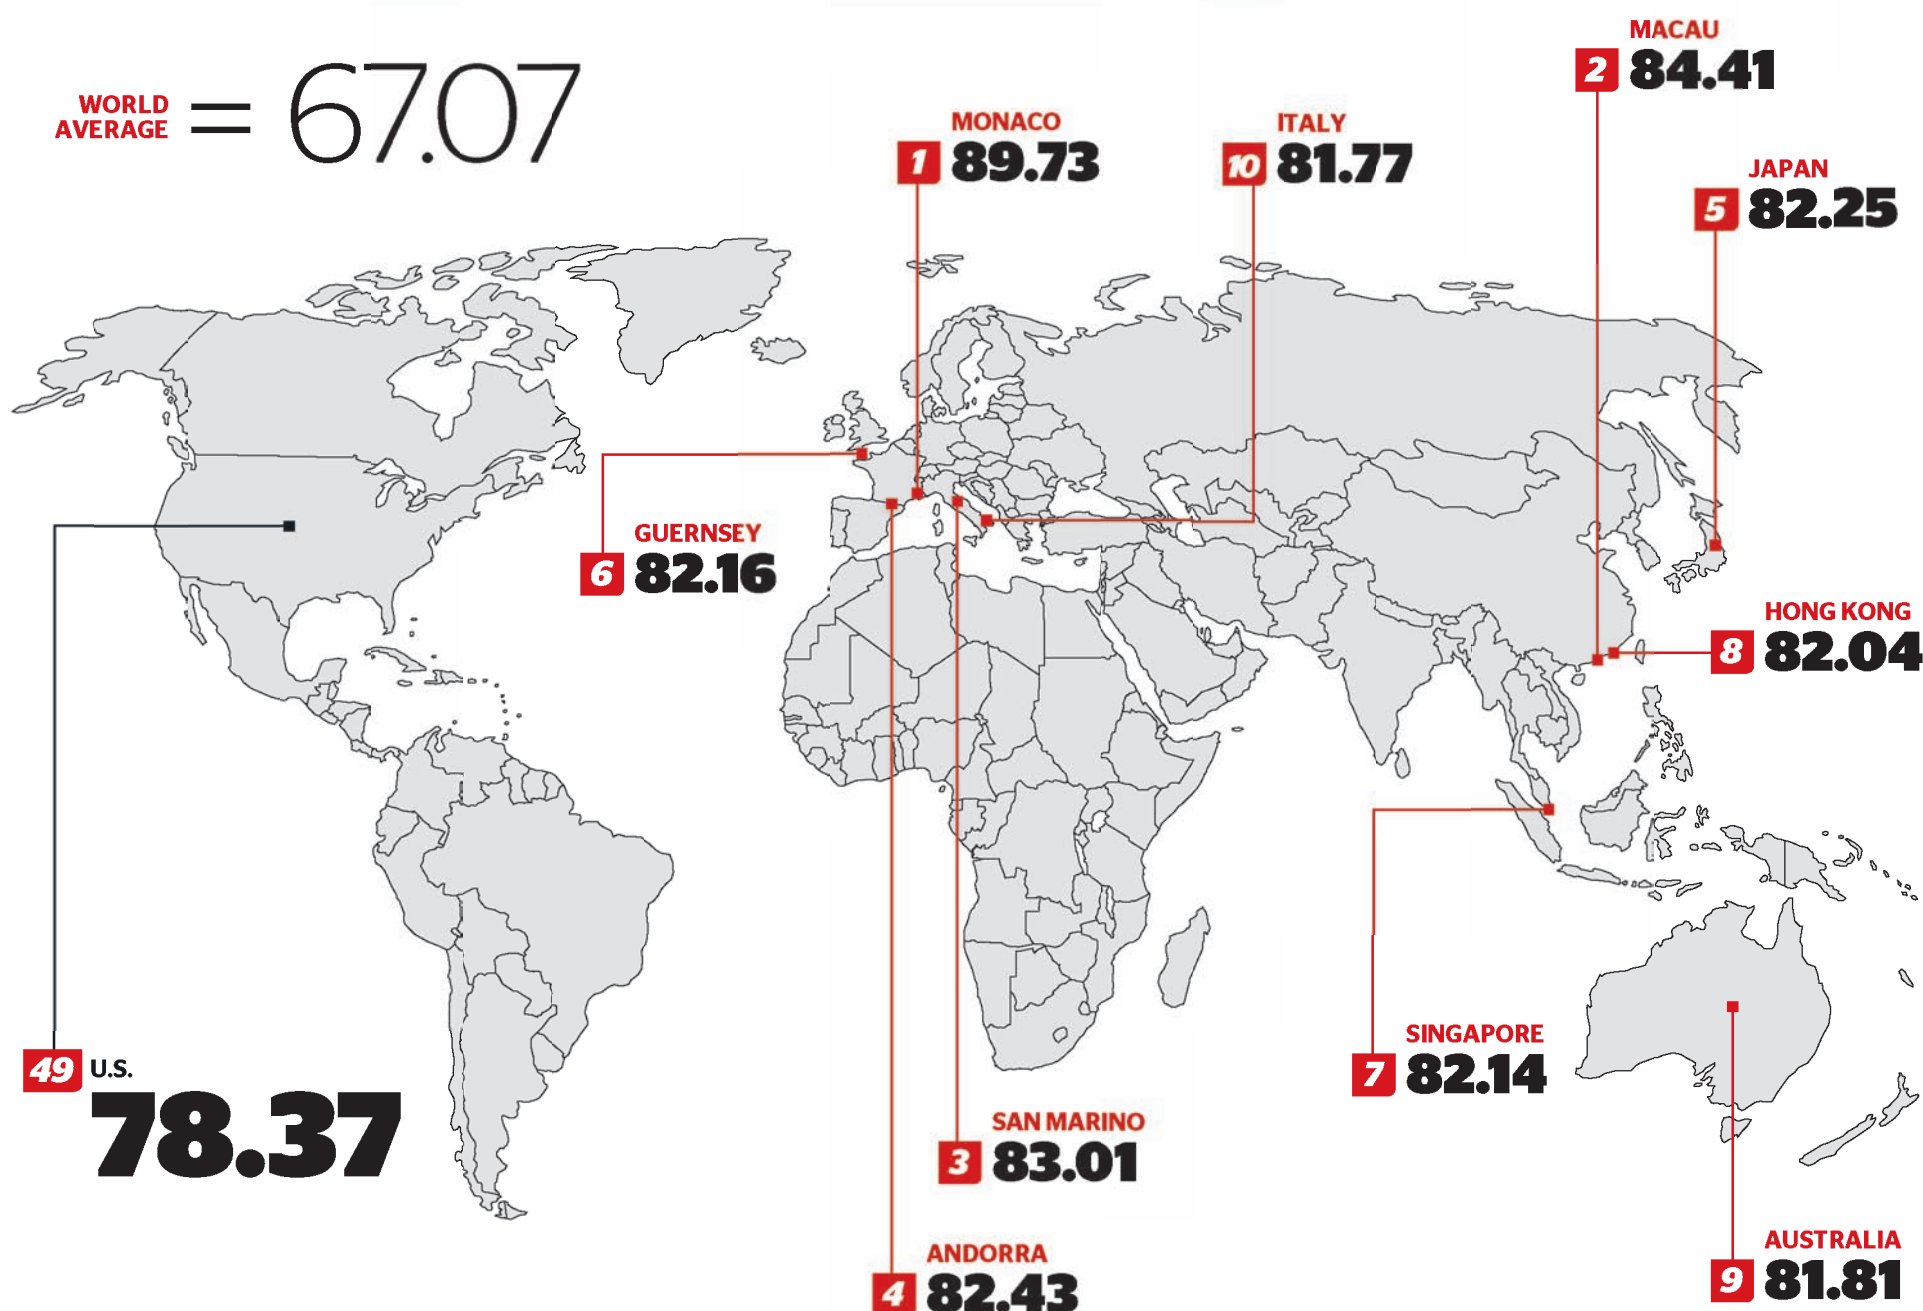

It's also 10 years more than the U.S., which comes in at No. 49 with an average life expectancy of 78.37. The world average is 67.07. CNN is periodically tracking world statistics to illustrate how the U.S. stacks up.

Twenty-nine nations have life expectancies over 80, but there also are eight under 50. It might not be surprising that Afghanistan (45.02) is part of that group. The rest are African countries, including last-place Angola (38.76), which still is rebuilding from a 27-year civil war that ended in 2002.

Angola also has the highest crude death rate in the world, with 23.4 deaths a year for every 1,000 people, the CIA World Factbook said.

Police investigate the scene of Monday's shooting on the State Street bridge over the Chicago River. ANDREW A. NELLES FOR TRIBUNE

Man shot in the head

Police still searching for State Street gunman after rush hour attack

Chicago Tribune

A 29-year-old man was shot and wounded on the State Street bridge over the Chicago River at the height of Monday evening's rush hour.

The victim was on the west side of the bridge, near Wacker Drive, when the gunman shot him in the head at very close range about 5 p.m., Cmdr. Gary Yamashiroya said.

He was taken to Northwestern Memorial Hospital in serious-to-critical condition, according to fire officials. The man was able to communicate with detectives, but police did not have further information on his condition.

The gunman fled south on State, carrying a chrome handgun, as people came to the victim's aid. Witnesses told police the gunman may have headed toward the Millennium Park Metra station.

Police said they believe the victim was targeted and that the shooting was not random.

Yamashiroya said police were reviewing footage from the many surveillance cameras in the area but were not sure the shooting was captured on tape.

The gunman was described as black, thin build, with a short afro haircut, wearing a light blue dress shirt with the sleeves rolled up and black shorts. He may also be wearing a rain coat.

Police say they found a shell casing and a backpack believed to belong to the shooter.

Gary Reidy was eating at the Smith & Wollensky steakhouse nearby when he thought he heard a car backfiring.

"You don't expect this kind of thing on a Monday afternoon in downtown Chicago," he said.

Carl Burson Jr., 32, was on his way to a movie.

"This is not a war zone, this is downtown Chicago," Burson said. "We don't do that down here."

Referring to a 6-year-old killed over the weekend in Englewood, he added: "What is going on in the world today?"

"This is not a war zone, this is downtown Chicago. We don't do that down here."

Sell-offs rattle world markets

Political leaders failed to halt a global stock market rout that gathered steam Monday as investors lost confidence that Europe and the U.S. can rein in their budgets quickly and fear spread of a double-dip recession.

The European Central Bank swept into the bond market to buy up Italian and Spanish debt and sling a safety net under the euro zone's third and fourth largest economies. But bickering persisted in Europe over a longer-term rescue plan.

In the U.S., President Obama called for urgent action on the budget deficit but his proposal on taxes promptly was rebuffed by Republicans.

The G7 finance ministers' and central bankers' pledge Sunday to help smooth markets if needed provided little solace.

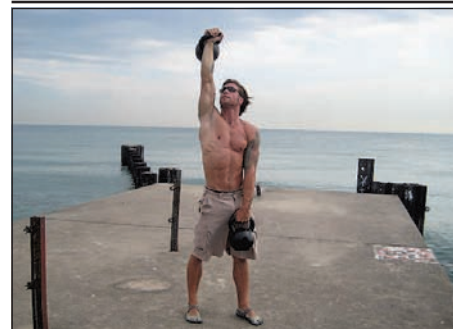

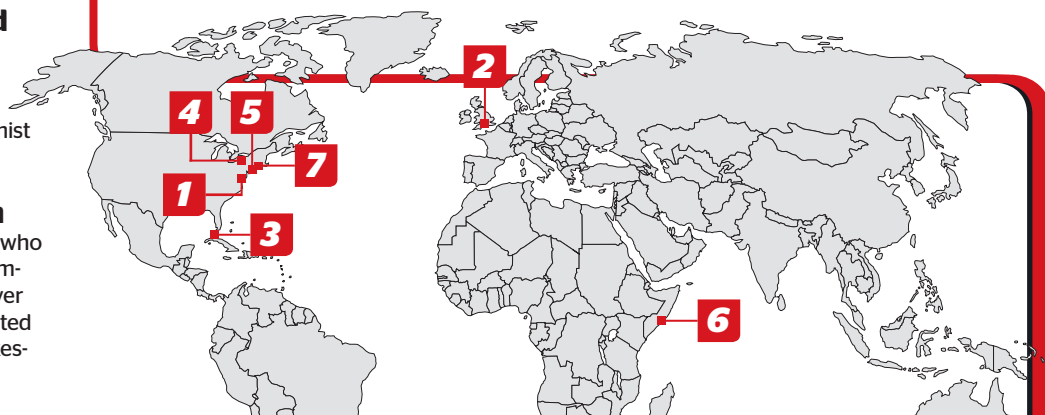

Selling that began in Asia and Europe accelerated in the U.S., where the broad Standard and Poor's 500 index plunged 6.7 percent to close at 1,119.46, its worst sell-off since Dec. 1, 2008. The Dow Jones shed 634.76 points to 10,809.85.

A huge blow to investor confidence was the Standard and Poor's downgrade of the U.S. sovereign credit rating late Friday, which compounded spreading concerns that the worsening euro-zone debt crisis and a faltering U.S. economy heighten the risks of a double-dip recession.

Realization on both sides of the Atlantic that the political obstacles to quick budgetary reform are so huge and the monetary options so limited has deepened the pessimism.

The worsening market turmoil puts significant pressure on the U.S. Federal Reserve at its regular policy meeting Tuesday to announce some fresh measures of support for a damaged U.S. economy.

Jocks and stocks

How would Chicago sports teams fare on the market?

If Chicago sports teams were stocks, Monday would not have been a good day for them. They're not, of course, but let's treat them as investments anyway. Who's up? Who's down? Introducing the RedEye Sports Industrial Average. REDEYE

Probably the safest bet in Chicago sports right now with superstar point guard Derrick Rose steering the Bulls' ship and a crew made up of Joakim Noah, Luol Deng and Carlos Boozer. They made it to the Eastern Conference finals last season, and there's no reason to believe they can't get there again. The only problem? It doesn't appear as though there will be an NBA season.

URSA

88.11

Like the Bulls, the Bears were just a step away from playing in a championship only to lose to archrival Green Bay in the NFC title game. Some would say the Bears have been downgraded due to the loss of Olin Kreutz and Brad Maynard, but they've added firepower in wide receiver Roy Williams, running back Marion Barber and offensive lineman Gabe Carimi. A safe bet to pay off in the playoffs.

ICE

73.01

The Blackhawks introduced defenseman Dan Carcillo and winger Andrew Brunette on Monday, part of another summer of changes for the 2010 Stanley Cup champs. After taking the Vancouver Canucks to seven games in the first round of the playoffs this year and locking up Patrick Sharp long term, things are looking up. Invest heavily unless you are afraid of continuous rumors of Patrick Kane drinking in every tavern in town.

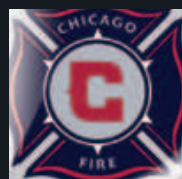

KK

They were supposed to be better than a third-place team, but that's what the White Sox have been. Even more troubling, there are questions about manager Ozzie Guillen's future with the team, pitcher Jake Peavy's penchant for getting injured and high-priced slugger Adam Dunn's historically terrible season. We might have seen the best of this team for the short term.

TIE

When the highlight of your season just might be getting beaten by the world's most popular soccer team in a friendly, you might be the Fire. In all seriousness, the Fire have been the epitome of average. They have 13 ties in 22 games played. Heck, they just might be tying somebody right now—and they aren't even playing.

A lost season makes it 103 years and counting since the Cubs' last World Series title. Although there are bright spots like impressive young shortstop Starlin Castro, third baseman Aramis Ramirez's strong second half and speedy outfielder Tony Campana, there's no reason to believe the Cubs are anywhere near another playoff appearance. Stay away; stay far away.

1 Help settle the contract dispute between Matt Forte and the Bears.

Forte should hold out until he gets everything he wants. That's how compromises work, right?

Threaten to hold out unless Scott and Kurt are added to the taxi squad. "Hey, taxi!"

Simple. Bears: Give him what he wants. Forte: Give them the best year of your career.

Since the Bears have such difficulty at the goal line, every time Forte scores on 3rd and goal, he gets a bonus.

C'mon, show Washington how deals are really done.

2 What new Bears addition are you most excited about?

Roy Williams' shoulder pads.

The addition of the Honey Bears! They are coming back, aren't they?

Unless the Bears are adding some outrageous new dish to the stadium menu, nothing stands out.

A new field.

Roy Williams. And I hope he brings his rowdy friends.

3 What might Adam Dunn do while taking a few games off for the White Sox?

Visit Christina Aguilera to brainstorm other ways to stop getting hits.

Go to the batting cages at Sluggers to work on his swing and 12-ounce curls.

He could always start filing the paperwork to open a car dealership when his career ends next year.

Open up a burger bar called Well Dunn. He's not making money from baseball much longer.

Not hear any boos. Unless he's watching my favorite show, "Casper."

4 Cubs win seven straight; White Sox sweep the Twins. What's going on?

Nothing of note.

Nothin', absolutely nothin'. They both are already saying "Wait till next year."

Nothing big. They're just ensuring that they are only bad enough to avoid a good draft pick.

One last push to give Chicagoans false hope before we turn our attention to football.

Happy days are here again. Briefly, at least.

5 Adam Scott won Sunday with Tiger's old caddie. What's Tiger thinking?

"What's that waitress's number?"

"Don't go to Vegas and blow your wad, dude." (Pun intended.)

Tiger is clearly thinking about one thing only: when he can next get lucky.

"I wonder how his wife would look in a thong."

"I need to re-evaluate my stroke."

In 1999, my mom bought me a pack of Bowman Chrome baseball cards for no real reason other than I'm a great son (that's how I like to remember it, anyway). In this pack, I pulled out a Gold Refractor Adam Dunn rookie card, numbered 13/25. At the time, Beckett priced the card at around $600.

That $600 would have made me the 13-year-old Warren Buffet, but naturally, I didn't cash in since I thought selling baseball cards was sacrilegious.

That might have been a mistake.

Since then, Dunn has been one of my favorite players. When he joined the White Sox, I was thrilled. He was a model of consistency, one of the most feared hitters in baseball. I figured he'd hit minimally 80 homers a year playing at the Cell. He might not get 80 hits this year.

It's likely he'll end up with the worst average in a single season in the live-ball era, beating Rob Deere's 1991 mark of .179. As a designated hitter, Dunn's only job is to hit, something he fails at approximately 83 percent of the time.

In sports, you are supposed to forget these players are humans and think of them as 6-foot-6, 280-pound machines that make tons of money. They're not.

By all accounts he's a great guy. I don't care how much he's making, I feel horrible for him. He's booed at home, something I hate (except in the case of Jay Cutler, which is justified). It accomplishes nothing and just strains the relationship between the player and the fans. Worse, Dunn seems rattled by it.

Judging by the moves the Sox have made (or lack thereof—Free Dayan!), they don't care about winning this year. Their season is over.

But Dunn gives Sox fans something to root for.

If fans care about their team, they should do anything they can to help Dunn from ending up on of the wrong side of history.

Cheer for him when he comes up to bat. Golf clap when he strikes out in four pitches instead of three. When he gets a hit, do an MJ-over-Craig Ehlo leaping fist pump. Before you know it, he'll be threatening the Mendoza Line.

This always works in the movies.

Plus, I could really use $600 right now.

TRACY'S TRIPPIN'

RedEye reporter Tracy Swartz is visiting nine major-league ballparks in nine days. Monday, she was at the New York Mets' Citi Field. Here's her puncard to Chicago.

As a Gators fan, I love the orange and blue. And as a former Queens resident, I love the Mets.

This was my first trip to Citi Field, a new and beautiful stadium.

We ate at Shake Shack, the hip New York burger joint. The meat was good but the meat market was not. Not a lot of guy candy and not a lot of guys.

We saw the Mets version of Ronnie Woo-Woo: Cow-Bell Man, who dings a cowbell incessantly as he roves the game. That's what the Mets need: More cowbell. And more fans.

Chain gang

The scoop on 4 new restaurants headed to Chicago

By Lisa Arnett

Chicago is awesome. You know it, we know it and, clearly, the brains behind a number of restaurant chains know it, too—that's why they're planning to open here in the next few months. To rate how we feel about the arrival of these out-of-towners, we've assigned each of them a welcome factor from 1 (seriously skeptical) to 5 (totally stoked).

Native Foods Cafe

1484 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-489-8480

ETA: Aug. 9

While on vacation in Palm Springs, Chicagoan Andrea McGinty randomly wandered into Native Foods Cafe, but backpedaled when she realized it was a vegan restaurant. But after trying a burger (which, like the entire menu, was made completely with plant-based ingredients), she was hooked and eventually signed on to bring the counter-service spot nationwide. "You can leave the restaurant saying, 'I just had an Oklahoma bacon cheeseburger and I don't feel full or gross, and I'm doing something good for the Earth,'" she said. The chain has opened its headquarters in Chicago, and after this location in Wicker Park, has two others planned for the Loop and Lakeview next month. By 2012, it aims to have 50 locations countrywide.

Welcome factor: 🍷 🍷 🍷 🍷 🍷

With the closing of Veggie Bite and Earwax, a new vegan restaurant is totally needed in this neighborhood.

Vapiano

2577 N. Clark St.

ETA: Late summer

At this fast-casual restaurant, customers will order by scanning a card at stations for salad, pizza, panini or pasta, or even at the bar for a glass of wine or a cocktail. Though Vapiano's Lincoln Park location is the first in Illinois, the chain started in Europe and is expanding to Asia, Australia and elsewhere in the U.S.

Welcome factor: 🍷 🍷 🍷

The combo of stations and cards kind of reminds of us our college dining hall days, but with fresh-made pastas, hand-tossed pizzas and booze, it sounds like a significant upgrade.

Cantina Laredo

508 N. State St.

ETA: Mid-September

The massive stone building recently built at State and Illinois streets in River North belongs to this Texas-based chain of gourmet Mexican restaurants serving brunch, lunch, dinner and plenty of guacamole made tableside. Executive chef Larry Sinclair was a culinary partner with P.F. Chang's, which seems fitting considering that Cantina Laredo's size (the main dining room seats 286) and "upscale" concept sounds like a Mexican version of the popular Chinese restaurants.

Welcome factor: 🍷 🍷 🍷

We're encouraged by the news that it'll serve local booze from 5 Rabbits Brewing and North Shore Distillery, but we can't help but feel skeptical about a "gourmet Mexican" chain moving in just a few blocks from Rick Bayless' always-awesome Frontera Grill, Topolobampo and Xoco.

American Flatbread

4743 N. Lincoln Ave.

ETA: By the end of the year

When the Lincoln Square location of this Vermont-based pizzeria chain opens, it'll serve wood-fired pies and beer brewed right on site. The company has about a dozen locations on the East Coast, plus one in Hawaii and one in Santa Barbara, Calif., and staff at each restaurant makes an effort to be involved in its community, partner Fred Gale says. Efforts include sourcing local produce, hosting "Benefit Bakes" fundraisers and running outreach programs to teach kids about healthy eating.

Welcome factor: 🍷 🍷 🍷 🍷 🍷

American Flatbread's track record of community outreach gives us the warm fuzzies, and when it comes to locally brewed beer, more is more.

More outsiders moving in Magnolia Bakery: The New York-based sweets shop will open a State Street location in the Block 37 building in August or September.

Three Forks: This Texas-based steakhouse is planning a location for 333 E. Benton Place.

BLT American Brasserie: Famed New York chef Laurent Tourondel is opening this restaurant in the old Brasserie Ruhlmann space in River North. Another location is also in the works for New York City.

We the Pizza: The D.C.-based New York-style pizza place, run by former "Top Chef" contestant Spike Mendelsohn, reportedly is scouting neighborhoods for a Chicago location.

City Winery: New York's restaurant/bar/music venue hybrid is planning a sprawling location in the Sullivan Center on State Street in the Loop.

Chicago Bowl: The owners of Brooklyn Bowl, a New York bowling alley, restaurant and music venue, are planning this similar location on Chicago Avenue.

KING TONES

Will Jay-Z/Kanye West collabo rock the world?

RedEye

Jay-Z and Kanye West on Monday finally released the digital version of their much anticipated collaboration, "Watch the Throne," as a duo called the Throne.

The most surprising part of the album's release wasn't that two of the most acclaimed rappers of the past two decades teamed up to create it. It was that unlike every Jay-Z and West album of the recent past, "Watch the Throne" wasn't leaked online.

How did they pull it off?

"We took great care to deliver this to the people without it leaking at all," Jay-Z told MTV.

Their release strategy helped keep the album tracks secret. It was released digitally only on iTunes at midnight Monday, and will not get a physical release until Friday, when it will be available only at Best Buy for the next two weeks. It comes in a 12-track regular release, and a 16-track deluxe edition.

"It took eight months [to make]. We should be able to release it the way we like without everyone being all up in arms," Jay-Z told MTV. "We didn't want the music to leak. We wanted to present it to the people in its entirety. When you send it out, once it leaves the plant and that's the end of it."

Fans have waited for the album with bated breath since West announced the project on Twitter on Aug. 27, 2010. The rappers have 15 No. 1 albums between them, and "Watch the Throne" easily is one of the year's most talked-about records.

iTunes did not have its chart listing updated Monday, but according to musicchartfeeds.com, the deluxe edition of "Watch the Throne" was No. 1 on the iTunes album chart and the regular version was No. 2.

And now that "Throne Day" is over, we'll see how long Hova and Yeezy rule the rap world as the Throne—and if their strategy changes the way albums are released in the future. CONTRIBUTORS: LOS ANGELES TIMES, ZAP2IT

THE ROYAL COUPLE

Jay-Z and Kanye West got some help on "Watch the Throne." Here's a look at some of the album's producers, samples and name-checks.

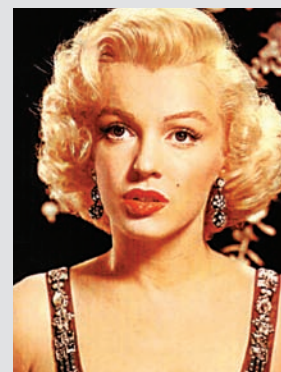

PRODUCERS

- » Kanye West
- » The Neptunes
- » Mike Dean
- » RZA of Wu-Tang Clan
- » The Juggernauts
- » Swizz Beatz
- » Hit-Boy
- » No I.D.
- » Jeff Bhasker
- » Q-Tip (in collaboration with West)

SAMPLES

- » The already classic snippet from Otis Redding's "Try a Little Tenderness."
- » Tidbits from French dance-rock group Cassius and '70s rock group Spooky Tooth
- » The foundational "Apache" break by the Incredible Bongo Band
- » A host of James Brown sounds that take the Godfather's voice and beats to terrains heretofore untraveled.
- » A great dialogue track from the Will Ferrell vehicle "Blades of Glory."

NAME-CHECKS

- » Hermes
- » Mark Rothko
- » Too Short
- » Gagosian
- » Marilyn Monroe
- » Mona Lisa
- » Rainer Maria Rilke

WHAT WE THINK

A few RedEye staff members listened to "Watch the Throne" on Monday and offer their knee-jerk reactions to the album:

Ernest Wilkins

Those Roc-a-fella boys did it again. They actually managed to create a concise rap record that actually (dare I say it?) lived up to the overblown hype. The record feels like they left a song or two on the cutting room floor in the interest of brevity, but whatever, I'm not going to complain.

Jim Walsh

Agree. This thing moves along at a nice clip—with a lot of variety. So many good tracks, but I'm not ashamed to admit "Otis" is still the standout for me.

Sara White

I wasn't hyped about the first half. Once "That's My [Bleep]" came along, though, I was all in: hooks from Elly Jackson and Justin Vernon plus a shout to "Monie in the Middle" (in the middle)? Blammo.

OTHER VOICES

- » Beyoncé
- » Frank Ocean
- » The-Dream
- » Elly Jackson of La Roux

COMING SOON

- Other rap albums dropping this month include:
- » Waka Flocka and Gucci's "Ferrari Boyz"—Tuesday
 - » Meek Mill's "DreamChasers" mixtape—Thursday
 - » Lil Wayne's "Tha Carter IV"—Aug. 29

'Watch the Throne' royally underachieves

By Greg Kot

TRIBUNE CRITIC

When two of the biggest names in hip-hop—Jay-Z and Kanye West—collaborate on an album, is there any way it can live up to the hype? Likely not, and that's the burden

"Watch the Throne" faces.

The two have done great work in the past. As a fledgling producer, West delivered soul-fired beats that underscored Jay-Z's 2001 release, "The Black Album," a hip-hop classic. Now the two operate more or less as equals, with West having a hand in most of the production and Jay-Z taking a slightly larger share of the vocals on "Watch the Throne." In many ways it's an album about mutual admiration.

Both artists have developed distinct, not necessarily complementary personas. Jay-Z is about imperious flow, bridging his gritty past on the streets with his current status as a cultural tastemaker and business mogul. He operates at arm's length from the listener. He no longer needs to surprise us, he simply needs to file annual updates reminding us that, after all, he's Jay-Z and you're not.

West is more desperate, transparent, awkward, vulnerable; he's not nearly the MC that Jay-Z is, but still he aims for the stars, often shooting well beyond traditional hip-hop subject matter and production in his desire to make an impression. He is the one more likely to surprise and enrage these days.

But on "Watch the Throne," West also must defer, and this makes for a sometimes difficult partnership. The production is often stellar, favoring West's soul-dusties sensibility, with snippets of James Brown, Otis Redding and Nina Simone. But it rarely takes the kind of chances West routinely takes on his solo albums. Instead, the idea is to create an album that lives up to its royal billing, a gilded collection of potential hits with lots of hooks and plenty of branding opportunities.

The tracks rely on an array of vocalists to supply hooks: Tellingly, the first vocal heard on the album is not from one of the two stars, but Odd Future's Frank Ocean,

'Watch the Throne'
Jay-Z and Kanye West

who provides the foreboding intro to "No Church in the Wild." "Lift Off" follows, with Jay-Z's other half, Beyoncé, delivering a vocal that again feels disengaged. "Take it to the moon, take it to the stars, how many people you know get this far," she sings. Please.

Coupled with the album's recent single "Otis," in which a sharp Redding sample is wasted on a rapid litany of product-placement shout-outs from West and Jay-Z extolling how rich they are, the album already is grossly out of touch with the summer of 2011. While America is struggling to regain its economic bearings, they rhyme about their private jets, expensive watches and supermodel escapades.

The album's second half finds the duo expanding the scope of their concerns, at least touching on the difficulties of the African-American community. But inevitably the focus returns to the two icons in "Welcome to the Jungle," "Murder to Excellence" and "Made in America."

Their guard lowers momentarily on "New Day." Over a handful of piano chords and a haunting soundscape from the Wu-Tang Clan's RZA, Jay-Z and West address their unborn sons. There is a poignant undertow as they own up to missteps and disappointments. West gets off the album's most darkly humorous lines when he addresses his nationally televised remarks chastising President George W. Bush after the Hurricane Katrina disaster in 2005: "I might even make him be Republican, so that everyone know that he love white people," he says of his unborn child.

In the past few days, West (and Jay-Z) inspired another powerful piece of protest music, when Public Enemy's Chuck D uploaded the song "Notice: Know This" on his website in response to the bling-saturated lyrics of "Otis."

Chuck D once called hip-hop "the black CNN," and from Grandmaster Flash and Melle Mel's "The Message" through N.W.A.'s "[Expletive] the Police," its self-regard always swaggered hand-in-hand with no-holds-barred street reporting. "This is our life," these classic hip-hop tracks declared, "deal with it."

In many ways, West and Jay-Z are saying something similar on their new album. But their approach is not to shine a spotlight on their community. Instead, they urge listeners to "watch the throne," and gaze in awe on their good fortune.

5 THINGS TO KNOW ABOUT JAMES' LITTLE BRO, DAVE

By Dana Moran
REDEYE

A new case of Franco-mania is going around. Oh, sorry James, you thought we were talking about you. This time, it's little bro Dave getting the attention. E! News reports Dave was among Lolla attendees this weekend, and was mobbed by admiring ladies at Gilt City's after-party Saturday at EnV. Here are five things you need to know about Dave before he gets more famous than his brother.

Dave Franco

He has something in common with Johnny Depp. Dave's playing Eric, a drug-dealing villain, in the remake of Depp's "21 Jump Street." We could see him doing evil with those eyebrows.

He's got some medical skills. Or at least is good at pretending like he does. Dave stepped in on Season 9 of "Scrubs" as a new series regular. He looks slightly better in scrubs than Zach Braff.

He gets McLovin' all hot and bothered. (And probably more than a few Funny Or Die viewers too.) Dave and Christopher Mintz-Plasse squared off in "You're So Hot," a hilariously NSFW video that dared viewers not to look away.

He could've been Edward Cullen. Dave screen-tested for the "Twilight" role that ultimately went to the uber-pasty Robert Pattinson, but says he's glad he didn't get the part because of the fame that came with it. Riight.

He's got a scary side. Dave must love remakes—he's also starring in the new "Fright Night" alongside Colin Farrell, and told MTV he's playing another jerk. "You're just going to hate me through the whole thing," he said. Aw, we don't believe that.

SPOILER ALERT!

Down a man

Seriously, if you don't want to know what happens to

Charlie Sheen's (left) character on "Two and a Half Men," stop reading. OK, according to an unnamed TMZ source, Charlie Harper makes his exit from the series after he and Rose marry—and she finds him cheating. According to TMZ, Rose speaks at Charlie's funeral, telling everyone he "slipped" off a platform in front of a subway train.

After Amy

The show must go on, as they say. After consulting with her family, the late Amy Winehouse's collaboration with British fashion line Fred Perry will be released to the public, the company said Monday in a statement. Proceeds from the line—which features tops, dresses and accessories in black and white patterns (lots of houndstooth)—will be donated to a soon-to-be-established foundation in her name, according to the company.

Hungry for more 'Hunger'

Attention, "Hunger Games" people. The movie starring Jennifer Lawrence (left) as heroine Katniss Everdeen is in production and won't hit theaters for months, but a release date for a movie based on the sequel "Catching Fire" by author Suzanne Collins already has been set for Nov. 22, 2013. Mark your calendars!

'Runway' ins and outs

Brace yourselves, "Project Runway All Stars" fans. Lifetime has announced a shakeup in the lineup. Out are Heidi Klum, Tim Gunn (both above), Nina Garcia and Michael Kors. Replacing them as host, mentor and judges, respectively, are model Angela Lindvall, Marie Claire editor Joanna Coles, and designers Isaac Mizrahi and Georgina Chapman. It's gonna be cray-zay.

THEY'RE ROLLIN'

Fear not: "Mad Men" is finally up and running again.

Filming on the fifth season—which had been up in the air due to disputes between show runners and AMC—has begun, ew.com reports.

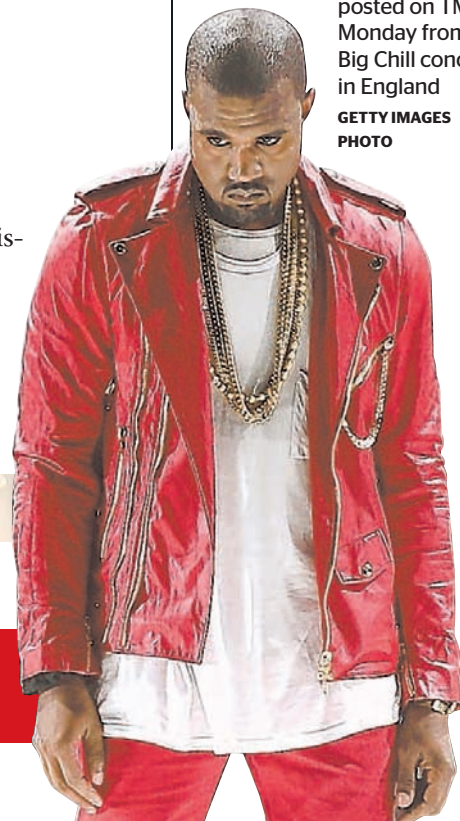

The site has posted a pic of stars Jon Hamm (above) and Elisabeth Moss working on the set with creator Matt Weiner. Turns out Don Draper himself will direct the premiere of the new season.
